Stilwell Feared Trick---Mitchel's Subway Vote Scored

At which Stilwell answered, "Come and sit down. This will interest you." Unversagt apparently turned to Warden Clancy and said:

"Well, he is more and more convinced that it will have to be done."

To which Stilwell answered: "That's all right."

Unversagt is then quoted as saving that he felt the whole matter should be left to the Governor, who could act as a stakeholder, as it were. The stenographic conversation here is as follows:

Stilwell-I den't know just what you mean as stakeholder. Unversage-Why, just this: I told him in case you executed any papers he would be the judge, the stakeholder in the matter himself. Stilwell-Now if they sent somebody down here who does not know-Oh, I'll have to keep my aminunition myself-at least until I go before the Governor. The conversation that followed there after showed that Mr. Unversagt and his friends had spoken to the Governor and others in Albany about the proposition

The conversation thereafter for some time was as to the possibility of trouble from a pardon issued by Gov. Sulzer, then under charges, and what possible action could be taken. It was ended in time for Messre Unversage and Amory to catch a train for New York city.
